

believe a quoted first-person account has far more credibility than an author's interpretation. All times quoted are local time. Locations and countries are referred to by their names at the time of the events described and similarly, weights and measures are given in pre-decimal figures.

This narrative has grown considerably thanks to input along the way from many of my aviation history colleagues. Thank you all. My special gratitude goes to three friends who made exceptional efforts to assist me with this book: Phil Vabre, Bob Livingstone and Paul Sheehan. Thank you for your willing help and expertise.

I hope this account brings attention to the magnificent efforts of all those engaged on the Qantas Indian Ocean services from 1943 to 1946.
